Sponsor an autistic adult to live in this home.

75% of adults with autism can’t afford to live on their own, and their families can’t support them in living independently.

What happens when adults with autism or other neurodivergent individuals can no longer live at home? Where do they go? Where will they live? This is where you come in.

This is a story of hope - three neurodivergent adults will move into their own safe and secure housing unit in January. For the first time in their lives, they’ll be able to live independently - free from isolation or loneliness! They will be living with neurotypical housemates as peers, they’ll make new friends, enjoy family-style meals, create lasting bonds, and become part of the local community.

You can help them today by making a sponsorship commitment HERE on our website. The goal is to raise enough money to cover the living expenses for three adults for the first few months of 2023, getting them off to a strong start. Sponsor at https://frontporchcohousing.org/support-us/sponsor/

Every person deserves the opportunity to grow into a happy and fulfilled adult. And yet, this can be difficult for neurodivergent people because the future is so uncertain. You can change that!

Won’t you join them in changing their world?
Prospective Residents on the Front Porch

Their future depends on you.

Mark is 27 and works as part-time as a security officer at a local events arena. Mark wants to live his life – a life that may eventually include marriage, a home of his own, a lawn to mow, and maybe a dog...just like most 27-year old’s. But Mark’s road is so much harder than a typical man his age. Living in this home would help alleviate isolation and loneliness – for him and his housemates – and help him on the road to living life fully.

Diana is 36 years old and works in the food preparation area of a local Hospital. She makes up trays of side dishes for patients and checks the items for freshness and presentation. She also assists in general kitchen support. Diana would like to be more independent in an environment where she remains safe and comfortable.

James is a young man who has always lived with his parents. When given the opportunity to socialize with peers his age, he blossoms into a different person. In that regard, he is very much a typical 28-year-old man. James works part-time at Rite Aid, stocking shelves and checking product expiration dates. Given a chance to live independently and socialize with his peers, he would thrive and grow in ways that are not currently possible.

You can make a difference for adults like Mark, Diana, and James by sponsoring one or more of them through our website at https://frontporchcohousing.org/support-us/sponsor/

They need your compassion, understanding, and financial support to live independently for the first time in their life!

This is just the beginning. Many neurodivergent people in our community find themselves in similar situations. Neurodivergent people deserve to thrive as part of society rather than be marginalized or isolated because of their inability to afford to live independently.

We should all want to live in a world where those like Mark, Diana, and James can be considered equals with everyone else and given the opportunity to live an independent life.
